IDEV webinar series: Participatory Evaluation

Abstract: Participatory evaluation is an approach, which implies to give voice to the stakeholders of an intervention, in its evaluation design, process and results. This webinar will discuss the specificities of this methodology, as well as challenges and opportunities related to its application. The evaluators aim to instill curiosity and promote a discussion around the use of this approach, particularly in the evaluation of AfDB policies, programs and interventions. The webinar will be useful to evaluators, project designers, and communicators working in development. Join us listen to Ms. Latefa Camara and Ms. Carla Silva discuss participatory evaluation.

The presenters

Latefa Camara is an evaluation professional who has been working in evaluation in BDEV since 2015, particularly on Country strategy and program evaluations (eg. Mozambique, Guinea Bissau) as well as corporate evaluations. Previous experience include working at the African development institute of the AfDB as well as a mining company and the Ebola coordination unit in Guinea.

Carla Silva has thirteen years of experience as a social expert in Africa, focused on fragile states, project management and analytical sector work in the human development field. Key sectors of experience include monitoring & evaluation, political economy, and civil society engagement through participatory action research and social change. Between 2006 and 2009 Carla worked with the NGO sector, providing support to actions under European Commission funded programmes and evaluations in Sub-Saharan Africa, including in Cabo Verde, Guinea-Bissau and Angola. In 2010 she joined the African Development Bank (AfDB), working with the Human Development Department, the Fragile States Unit and the High-Level Panel for Fragile States. Since March 2015, Carla has supported IDEV in a number of country strategy and program evaluations, including in Lusophone countries in Africa. Other assignments comprise the AfDB Comprehensive Evaluation of Development Results (CEDR) and facilitation of the Independent Evaluation of the Implementation of the Development and Business Delivery Model of the AfDB.
